

Editors' Comments

Robbie Culp

Katie Hatch

Robbie Culp is a licensed clinical psychologist and works at a university counseling center at University of California, Santa Barbara. He has two children and enjoys the work that he does. Robbie is excited to be working as an editor for his first issue of the person centered journal. While this year has been filled with many changes personally and professionally Robbie was excited to take on the task of being a co-editor with the support of his family, friends, and of course Katie Hatch. He would like to thank everyone for their submissions and continued work in the person centered world.

Kathryne (Katie) Hatch is a licensed clinical psychologist from the Western suburbs of Chicago. She has continuously worked in private practice settings, but recently made a commitment instead to the experience of motherhood. Although passionate about her commitment to the field and continuing to see clients part time, Katie is ever dedicated to her growing family and attending to her two small children and devoted husband. She is exceedingly excited to partake in the journal duties alongside her close friend, colleague, and collaborator, Robbie Culp.

Both Katie and Robbie want to thank everyone who helped navigate the compilation and publication of this issue of the journal. As newbies, we realize this publication took extra time as we learned the ropes and overcame roadblocks. Many thanks to our copy editor, Robert Diaz, all who submitted and reviewed articles, Rachel Jordan and Steve Demanchick for providing tips, and especially Kathy Moon in her dedication to helping us through this process!

Thanks!!!

Katie Hatch and Robbie Culp, Co-Editors
Person Centered Journal

