It is with great pride and a sense of accomplishment that we present our final issue of the Person Centered Journal as Editors. We are deeply grateful for Kathryn Moon's work as the Book Review Editor. In the last few years, she has reviewed, written, and coordinated many wonderful book reviews for our Journal. We want to thank Jeffrey Cornelius-White and Bruce Allen for their mentorship as former editors and would also like to thank Tiane Corso Graziottin, Bert Rice, and Sarah Walker who have been instrumental in making the journal available to ADPCA members each year. We would like to express our appreciation for members of our Editorial Review Board who have spent many hours reviewing articles in the last few years. Finally, we feel fortunate to have a readership that produces meaningful and passionate articles and book reviews that we have been proud to publish.

We wish to extend our best wishes to Robbie Culp and Katie Poole who will be taking over the Editors' roles after this issue. Publishing and editing the Person Centered Journal has been a wonderful experience and we both feel honored to have been a part of the rich history of this Journal and the Association for the Development of the Person Centered Approach. It is our hope that this Journal continues to produce scholarly publications that honor our history and members, examine the benefits of the Person Centered Approach, and continue the conversation about the Person Centered way of being.
