

Editors' Comments

Robbie Culp

Katie Hatch

Robbie Culp is a licensed psychologist and works at the University of California, Santa Barbara at the campus' Counseling and Psychological Services (CAPS). Robbie has four children, and lives in Santa Clarita with his wife. Robbie is happy to be working as an editor for the second issue as co-editor of the person-centered journal. This has yet again been a year filled with many changes, personally and professionally, and Robbie cannot thank his family, friends, and of course Katie Hatch, enough for being by his side. He would like to thank everyone for their submissions and continued work in the person-centered world.

Katie Hatch is a licensed clinical psychologist from the Western suburbs of Chicago. For several years, she has worked in private practice and community mental health settings. However, she has made a more recent commitment to primarily staying home and caring for her two small children while working in private practice part time. She is dedicated to a client centered way of being, and continues to be passionate for maintaining journal duties alongside her close friend, colleague, and collaborator, Robbie Culp.

Both Katie and Robbie are ever thankful for those who continue to help us navigate the compilation and publication of the journal. Kathy Moon is amazing in reviewing the details and sharing ideas to help make this journal great. Many thanks to our copy editor, Robert Diaz, and all of the amazing individuals who submitted and reviewed articles. We hope you enjoy this edition of the Person-Centered Journal!

Katie Hatch and Robbie Culp, Co-Editors
Person Centered Journal

